What is intinction?

Instead of drinking wine from the cup, why can't we just dip the consecrated host into the wine? I would think this would be more sanitary than having everyone drinking from the cup.

This way of receiving holy Communion, in which the priest or extraordinary minister of holy Communion dips the consecrated host into the consecrated wine before placing it on the communicant's tongue, is called intinction.

Communicants cannot do the dipping for two reasons: 1) the most recent version of the General Instruction on the Roman Missal doesn't give an option for communicants to dip the consecrated host; and 2) the Eucharist is supposed to be received from another person.

Recovering alcoholics and people who prefer to receive Communion in their hands don't like intinction, and some say intinction doesn't follow Jesus' instruction to drink the Precious Blood (Matthew 26:27-28).

But even if communicants were allowed to do the dipping, it wouldn't be more sanitary. Having many hands dipping into a chalice creates at least the same risk as having everyone drink from the cup and wipe the chalice rim with a purificator.

No matter how you receive the body and Blood of Christ, the Church has long taught that to receive even a crumb of the consecrated bread or a drop of the consecrated wine is to receive Jesus Christ fully.
